READER'S ORDERS

How to read this handbook, what is sourced, and what is intentionally fictional.

Purpose of the simulation

FICTION

This dossier models the first full election of The Admiralty, a 50-member World of Warships PC clan. The story starts after a close competitive defeat exposes unclear roster decisions, inconsistent training, and no trusted path to resolve disputes. The election turns those tensions into a public governance process instead of a personal feud.

Source-derived framework

SOURCE

The uploaded chart and governmnt.txt define the seat counts, branch responsibilities, and core procedure: nomination, campaign/debate, secret ballot, majority winner or runoff, published results, then transition. Laws need both legislative chambers before the Commander-in-Chief signs or vetoes them; veto overrides need two-thirds in each chamber.

Rules that are added for this example

PROPOSED

The source does not set voter eligibility in detail, ballot administration, campaign spending, Discord permissions, term limits, attendance minimums, or a complete appeal workflow. Where this handbook fills those gaps, the rule is marked PROPOSED IMPLEMENTATION and should be debated and adopted by members before real use.

What is real inside the fiction?

Grounded in the supplied sources: Commander-in-Chief and Vice Commander elected annually; Senate (4) annually; House (6) quarterly; Speaker chosen by House members; judiciary of Chief Justice + two Associate Justices by nomination and Senate confirmation with staggered annual terms; six department heads nominated by CINC and confirmed by Senate; Fleet Command (7) appointed on competitive merit; Service Corps (8) appointed by executive leadership; membership tiers totaling 14.

Invented for narrative clarity: every named player, candidate, clan history event, campaign quote, ballot count, court ruling, appointment, season result, and proposed operating rule. No real player is being described, and no result is presented as an actual World of Warships tournament outcome.

01 • FROM DIVISION TO REPUBLIC

FICTION

A fictional clan history built to explain why the first election became necessary.

2024

The six-player keel
Six online friends begin as a casual division and name their Discord server The Admiralty after a late-night discussion about teamwork and accountability.

2025 Q1

First common doctrine
A regular training night develops into replay review, ship-role notes, and a reserve list. The clan grows past 20 members.

2025 Q3

The Harbor Night split
A late roster substitution before a decisive clan battle is made without explanation. A public voice-channel argument follows; nobody agrees who had authority.

2026 Q1

A larger fleet
The group reaches 50 members. New players ask for a clear path from cadet to trusted teammate, while veterans ask for reliable attendance and serious practice.

2026 Q3

Charter before command
The founding group adopts the supplied Admiralty structure as a framework and schedules the first formal election.

ILLUSTRATION 01 — A founding watch at sea: the clan began as a small division, then needed procedures as its roster grew.

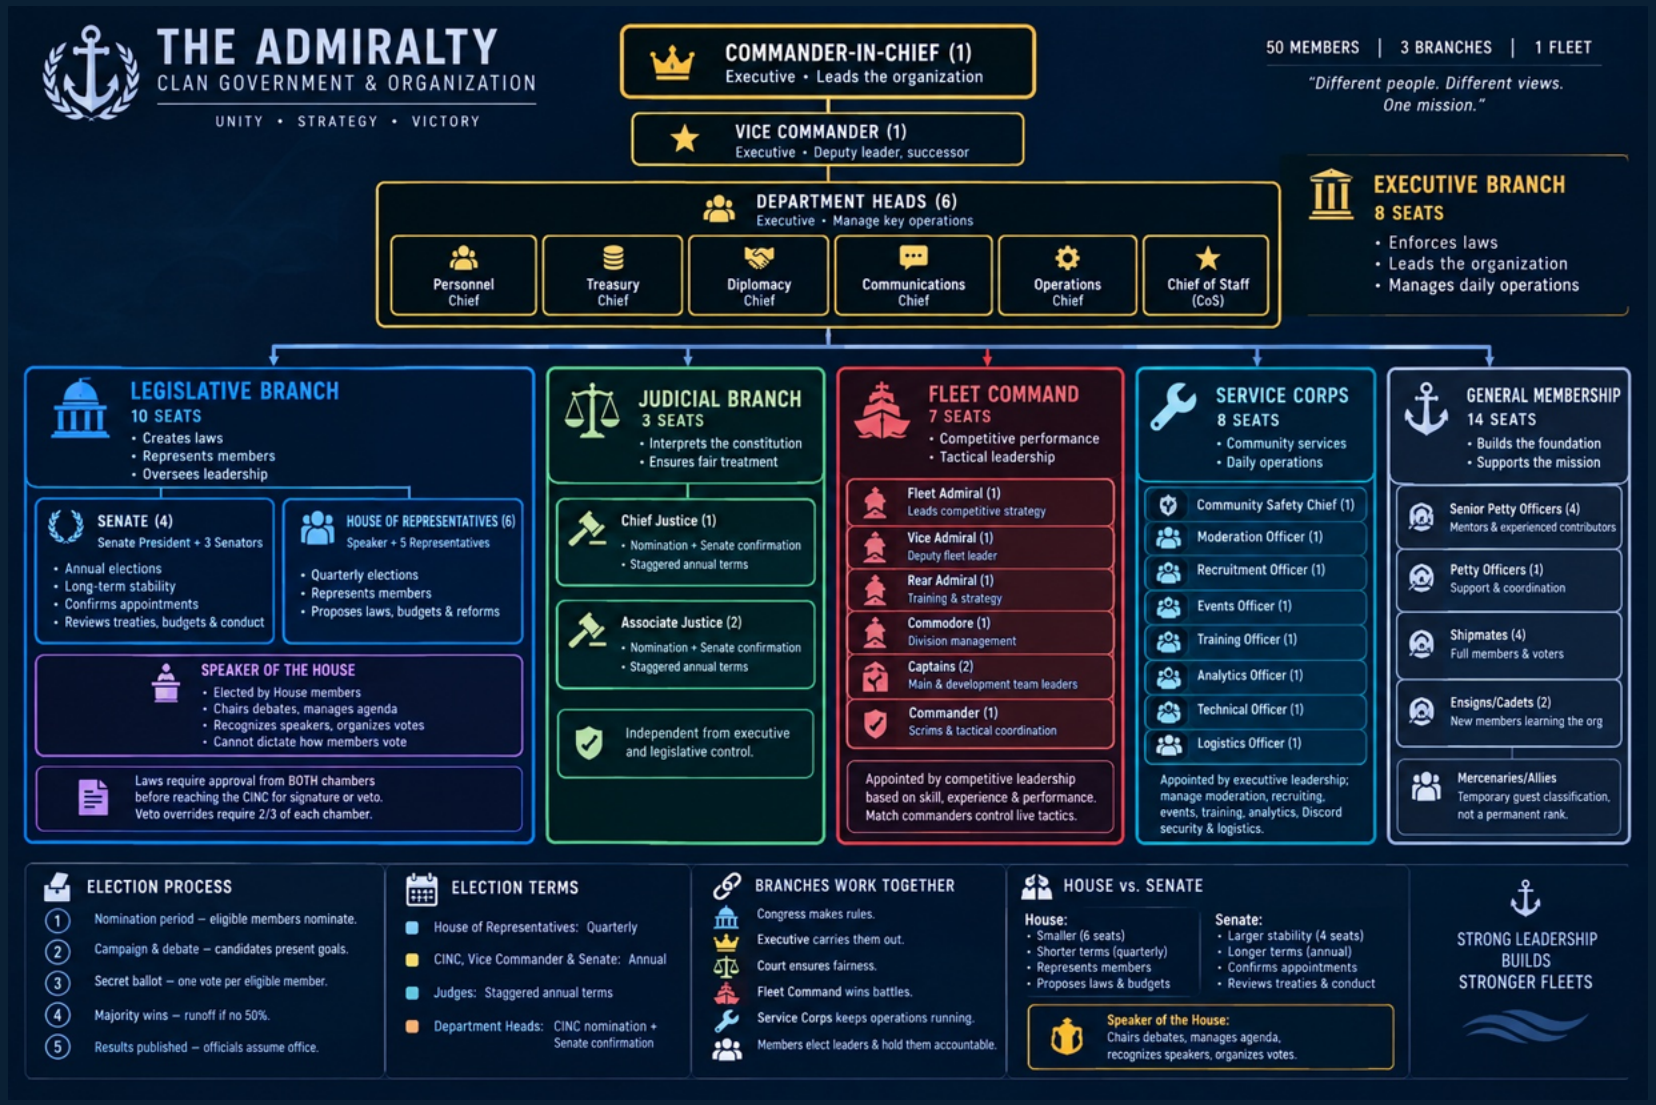

The founding dilemma

Should competitive readiness be earned through strict attendance and proven performance, or should the clan preserve a broad community where newer players can improve without being publicly ranked? Neither side is a villain: both fear losing the group they helped build. The first election is a way to choose priorities without turning every disagreement into a loyalty test.

The uploaded organizational chart remains the visual reference for this simulation.

Reference: supplied image "The Admiralty — Clan Government & Organization." The labels, headcounts, and branch placement in the original are preserved as the baseline; the next page translates the same structure into a quick-reading role map.

03 • THE GOVERNMENT AT A GLANCE

SOURCE

The structure totals 50 member positions across six functional groups; the source groups them around three branches plus fleet and service operations.

Executive Branch · 8 seats

SOURCE

Commander-in-Chief (1) — elected annually; chief executive, direction, representation.
Vice Commander (1) — elected annually; deputy leader and successor.
Department Heads (6) — Personnel, Treasury, Diplomacy, Communications, Operations, Chief of Staff; nominated by CINC and confirmed by Senate.

Legislative Branch · 10 seats

SOURCE

Senate (4) — President + three Senators; elected annually; confirms appointments and reviews treaties, budgets, and executive conduct.
House (6) — Speaker + five Representatives; House elected quarterly; represents members and proposes laws, budgets, and reforms. Speaker elected by House members.

Judicial Branch · 3 seats

SOURCE

Chief Justice (1) + Associate Justices (2). Selected by nomination and Senate confirmation; staggered annual terms. The court resolves disputes, hears appeals, reviews sanctions, and protects fair treatment. The source says it is independent of executive and legislative control.

Fleet Command · 7 seats

SOURCE

Fleet Admiral, Vice Admiral, Rear Admiral, Commodore, two Captains, and one Commander. The source assigns competitive strategy, tactical leadership, training, division management, scrims, and coordination to these appointed ranks. Match commanders control live tactics; appointment is merit-based, not a popular election.

Service Corps · 8 seats

SOURCE

Community Safety Chief; Moderation, Recruitment, Events, Training, Analytics, Technical, and Logistics Officers. The source assigns moderation, recruiting, events, training, analytics, Discord security, and logistics to this group. These roles are appointed by executive leadership.

General Membership · 14 seats

SOURCE

Four Senior Petty Officers; four Petty Officers; four Shipmates; two Ensigns/Cadets. Senior members mentor; petty officers support coordination; shipmates are full members and voters; cadets learn the organization. Mercenaries/Allies are temporary guest classifications, not permanent ranks.

04 • FIRST-ELECTION PROCEDURE

The source process is preserved; implementation details needed for a credible vote are labeled as proposals.

01

NOMINATION

Eligible members nominate candidates.

02

CAMPAIGN & DEBATE

Candidates publish platforms and answer questions.

03

SECRET BALLOT

One vote per eligible member.

04

MAJORITY / RUNOFF

Majority wins; runoff if no candidate reaches 50%.

05

PUBLISH & TRANSITION

Results are published; officials assume office after transition.

Source rules that govern the first cycle

SOURCE

- CINC, Vice Commander, and Senate: annual elections.
- House of Representatives: quarterly elections.
- Judges: staggered annual terms; nomination and Senate confirmation.
- Department Heads: CINC nomination + Senate confirmation.
- Laws require approval from both chambers before signature or veto by CINC.
- Veto override: two-thirds of each chamber.
- Branches do not rule alone; Fleet Command keeps live match authority.

Proposed inaugural election rules

PROPOSED

- Voter roll closes 48 hours before the ballot; 48 full members are eligible, while two Ensigns/Cadets observe but do not vote for this example.
- A neutral three-person clerk team handles one-use ballot tokens; no public vote screenshots are accepted as proof.
- Each single-seat race is counted independently; top line includes eligible count, ballots cast, abstentions, and totals.
- Candidate pages close before ballot open; corrections are logged with timestamps.
- A challenge is filed privately within 24 hours; the independent court reviews disputes after appointment.
- Those implementation rules are proposals, not source text.

05 • THE PEOPLE BEHIND THE PLATFORMS

FICTION

Their histories explain the disagreements; the characters and relationships are fictional.

The common bond

Six founding friends built a team. Fifty members now need a system that outlives founder friendships.

Rowan “Anchor” Pierce ↔ Elias “Wake” Mercer

Founders and former division partners. Rowan paused to explain a substitution; Elias thought explanation came too late and became the public voice for a stricter competitive standard. They still trust one another’s battle reads.

Mira “Valkyrie” Solano ↔ Jonah “Tide” Bell

Mira mentored Jonah through his first caller rotation. She favors a bridge between casual and competitive play; Jonah thinks the bridge needs schedules, defined practice blocks, and a reliable substitute pool.

Ava “Chartroom” Keene ↔ Darius “Keel” Holt

Ava rebuilt scrim attendance data after rumors distorted who showed up. Darius helped collect the first records, then worried the same spreadsheets could become a public ranking weapon. Their conflict is over access and context, not honesty.

The rule of the story

Disagreement is not disloyalty. No candidate is defined only by their faction or by losing a vote.

Lucas “Soundings” Chen ↔ Elena “Sparrow” Cruz

They are friendly rivals from the recruitment team. Lucas wants clear member feedback channels; Elena wants a responsive calendar and a shorter path from suggestion to House vote. Both promise not to turn Speaker selection into a personality contest.

06 • COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF RACE

FICTION

Annual election • chief executive • sets direction and represents the clan.

Illustrative candidate concept portrait — fictional character.

Rowan “Anchor” Pierce

Candidate A · elected, 26–19

Platform: build a repeatable training pipeline; publish a 90-day plan; protect the right to question decisions; recruit for fit and activity, not just win rate.

Record: founding caller who once took the blame for an unexplained roster swap. He wants policies that let a captain make a hard call without leaving a teammate humiliated.

Illustrative candidate concept portrait — fictional character.

Elias “Wake” Mercer

Candidate B · 19 votes

Platform: raise the competitive floor; set clear attendance expectations for core roster; make trial criteria visible; use replay review and scheduled scrims to identify readiness.

Record: Rowan’s former co-captain and a strong advocate for disciplined practice. He fears that a friendly culture can turn into vague standards and unfair surprises.

The debate: “Standards without humiliation”

Moderator: “When a player is benched for a decisive battle, what must the player be told?”
Rowan: “Tell them the tactical reason, the next path to regain a slot, and who owns the decision. Accountability cannot mean silence.”
Elias: “Tell them before the match, not after the loss. The strongest team is the one where everyone knows the standard before selection.”
Follow-up: Both agree that a live match commander keeps tactical authority. The unresolved choice is how much process belongs before and after a match; the new legislature will decide policy.

07 • VICE COMMANDER RACE

FICTION

Annual election • deputy leader and successor.

Mira “Valkyrie” Solano

Outcome: Elected, 24–21.
Platform — “Support. Develop. Lead.”
- Give every member a named mentor and a visible development goal.
- Keep competitive, training, and social events on one calendar.
- Publish a monthly member pulse check without exposing private feedback.
- Build a deputy rota so leadership does not vanish when the CINC is offline.

Backstory: Mira once stayed in voice after a failed division to help both sides cool down. She is trusted by new players and veterans, but some top performers fear her approach will slow decisions unless paired with clear match standards.

Jonah “Tide” Bell

Outcome: 21 votes.
Platform — “Structure that ships.”
- Set a predictable practice schedule with a reserve/substitute list.
- Track availability, training attendance, and development milestones.
- Rotate junior callers in controlled practice before ranked matches.
- Replace informal promises with written follow-up owners and dates.

Backstory: Jonah came up through the training division and respects Mira’s mentorship. He argues that supportive culture only scales when people know what happens next. His loss does not end his work: he volunteers to lead the practice-calendar pilot.

ILLUSTRATION 02 — The watch team: the Vice Commander is responsible for connection between roster, mentoring, and day-to-day leadership.

Relationship and compromise

FICTION

Mira appoints Jonah to coordinate the first 60-day practice calendar after asking him to write a one-page proposal. This is not a consolation office: the calendar is reviewed by Fleet Command and reported to the House. Jonah gains a measurable remit; Mira gains a trusted critic inside the process. The CINC promises to publish follow-up decisions, not just meeting notes.

08 • SENATE PRESIDENT RACE

FICTION

Annual election • the Senate is the continuity and oversight chamber.

Ava “Chartroom” Keene

Outcome: Elected, 25–20.
Platform: “Keep the ledger legible.” Publish agendas 48 hours before meetings; log appointment confirmations and votes; keep a transparent in-game resource and event ledger; protect confidential moderation records from public debate; require every budget proposal to name an owner and review date.

History: Ava maintained attendance records during the expansion to 50 members. Her dashboards reduced rumor but also exposed that different officers had been tracking different things. She accepts audit and correction rather than presenting every spreadsheet as complete.

Darius “Keel” Holt

Outcome: 20 votes.
Platform: “Continuity before churn.” Keep stable rules through the first competitive season; require a short impact statement for each proposed amendment; protect the Senate’s role as a review chamber; publish a plain-language monthly summary instead of a flood of raw metrics.

History: Darius was Ava’s partner when the first attendance table was assembled. He worries that data can look neutral while hiding context such as work shifts, family obligations, and ping differences. He loses the chair race but becomes a leading voice on privacy review.

First Senate promise

Ava’s first statement as President: “We are not here to run scrims from the dais. We are here to make the rules visible, confirm qualified appointments, examine the budget, and ask the same questions of friends and rivals.” Darius requests that the Senate publish an exception log alongside attendance metrics. Ava agrees to put it on the first agenda.

09 · SENATE SEATS: THREE CONTESTS

FICTION

Four total seats: President plus three Senators. All six profiles below are fictional candidates.

SENATOR I · COMMUNITY ACCESS

Niko “Northstar” Varga Elected 29–16
Open meeting summaries; accessible onboarding and published committee calendars. He is a tournament-minded analyst who argues that information should travel beyond the officer channel.

Tessa “Signal” Park 16 votes
Protect tactical and moderation privacy; publish decisions, not raw private logs. Tessa helped moderate Harbor Night and thinks transparency needs boundaries.

SENATOR II · STEWARDSHIP

Felix “Ledger” Shaw Elected 23–22
Treat in-game resource decisions as a public trust; set quarterly review points and keep rewards consistent. He is known for remembering every promised event reward.

Amara “Gunnery” Okafor 22 votes
Prioritize investments that create competitive capability: practice blocks, coaching, and shared strategy files. She warns that process should not prevent a useful experiment.

SENATOR III · DUE PROCESS

Priya “Compass” Nair Elected 27–18
Create clear procedures for sanctions, appeals, and appointments; separate evidence from rumor. She was the calm voice during the Harbor Night dispute.

Owen “Greywake” Flynn 18 votes
Make policies short, readable, and enforceable; avoid adding ceremony that busy volunteers cannot sustain. His concern is procedural overload, not the idea of fairness.

Campaign note: Each Senator race is a separate single-seat contest. That is a proposed ballot implementation that lets the source’s majority-and-runoff rule remain straightforward.

10 · HOUSE CONTESTS: SEATS 1–3

FICTION

House races are quarterly; the inaugural vote fills all six seats at once.

Seat 1 · Member voice

Lucas “Soundings” Chen Elected 25–20
Publish a member question queue, hold open office hours, and convert recurring concerns into bills instead of endless chat threads.

Briar “Broadside” Wallace 20 votes
Make House debate more direct and less formal; reserve agenda time for members who rarely speak.

Seat 2 · Events & inclusion

Elena “Sparrow” Cruz Elected 24–21
Publish the event calendar early; create beginner-friendly divisions and one low-pressure social night alongside competitive practices.

Mark “Harbor” Jansen 21 votes
Put recruiting and retention first; pair every new member with a welcoming buddy and reduce confusing channel sprawl.

Seat 3 · Training access

Soren “Kestrel” Ivers Elected 26–19

Dana “Telltale” Price 19 votes

House authority

Represent members, propose laws and budgets, and organize reforms. The House does not direct live battle tactics; it creates rules through the legislative process.

11 · HOUSE CONTESTS: SEATS 4–6

FICTION

Each winning Representative serves in the initial House; Speaker is selected by House members.

Seat 4 · Standards & welfare

Imani “Fleetfoot” Brooks Elected 28–17
Write clear conduct and attendance expectations with reasonable exception paths; protect members from public shaming.

Theo “Knot” Mercer 17 votes
Keep standards light enough to administer; one accountable officer should own each decision and explain it plainly.

Seat 5 · Fair opportunity

Caleb “Sonar” Wright Elected 23–22
Publish selection criteria for core roster, substitutes, and trials; use replay evidence rather than private popularity.

Rhea “Crosswind” Patel 22 votes
Require a brief written explanation for high-stakes roster changes; create a low-friction way to challenge a process error.

Seat 6 · Systems & reporting

Jun “Overwatch” Park Elected 27–18

Maeve “Wakefield” Quinn 18 votes

Campaign crossroads

Caleb and Rhea’s 23–22 contest is the closest single-seat race. Their agreement on transparent criteria becomes important when Rhea later challenges the count—not because she is a sore loser, but because she wants the process tested.

12 · THE CAMPAIGN TRAIL

FICTION

A 12-day campaign built around questions, forums, live debate, and a final quiet period.

ILLUSTRATION 03 — Candidates in a public forum: the goal is to test ideas, not stage a personal feud.

Campaign calendar

FICTION

Days 1–3 · Nomination: Candidates confirm eligibility and publish a short platform.
Days 4–6 · Open forum: Members submit questions to a shared queue; each candidate gets equal response time.
Day 7 · Competitive debate: Roster fairness, training and match authority.
Day 9 · Community debate: Safety, recruitment, mentoring, and Discord culture.
Day 11 · Final statements: No new promises after the final statement window closes.
Day 12 · Secret ballot: Clerk team publishes turnout and verified totals.

Debate-room ground rules · Proposed

PROPOSED

One moderator, fixed response windows, no dogpiling, no leaking private DMs, and one right of reply for an allegation. Candidates may disagree with an idea; they may not accuse a rival of disloyalty for running. The transcript is summarized publicly, with private information removed.

Three exchange moments that shifted the race

Rowan vs. Elias: they both accept published criteria, then disagree on how much pre-match explanation is feasible under time pressure.
Ava vs. Darius: Ava promises a readable ledger; Darius successfully pushes for exception notes so metrics do not flatten real-life circumstances.
Lucas vs. Elena: their proposed calendars converge into a House motion for one public schedule and one private competitive availability sheet.

13 • ELECTION NIGHT: EXECUTIVE & SENATE

FICTION

Fictional official result sheet • 45 ballots cast in each single-seat contest.

ILLUSTRATION 04 — A secret ballot: voter choices are private; certified totals are public.

Office / seat	Winner	Votes	Runner-up	Votes
Commander-in-Chief	Rowan “Anchor” Pierce	26 / 45 (57.8%)	Elias “Wake” Mercer	19 / 45
Vice Commander	Mira “Valkyrie” Solano	24 / 45 (53.3%)	Jonah “Tide” Bell	21 / 45
Senate President	Ava “Chartroom” Keene	25 / 45 (55.6%)	Darius “Keel” Holt	20 / 45
Senator I	Niko “Northstar” Varga	29 / 45 (64.4%)	Tessa “Signal” Park	16 / 45
Senator II	Felix “Ledger” Shaw	23 / 45 (51.1%)	Amara “Gunnery” Okafor	22 / 45
Senator III	Priya “Compass” Nair	27 / 45 (60.0%)	Owen “Greywake” Flynn	18 / 45

Certification summary

Turnout: 45 of 48 eligible members = 93.75% (proposed eligibility rule). Three eligible members did not cast a ballot. Each race had 45 valid votes; all winners exceeded 50%, so no runoff was required. The Senate II contest was the closest, at 23–22.

14 • ELECTION NIGHT: HOUSE & SPEAKER

FICTION

House of Representatives seats are filled in this inaugural cycle; quarterly elections begin next cycle.

House seat	Winner	Votes	Runner-up	Votes
Seat 1	Lucas “Soundings” Chen	25 / 45 (55.6%)	Briar “Broadside” Wallace	20 / 45
Seat 2	Elena “Sparrow” Cruz	24 / 45 (53.3%)	Mark “Harbor” Jansen	21 / 45
Seat 3	Soren “Kestrel” Ivers	26 / 45 (57.8%)	Dana “Telltale” Price	19 / 45
Seat 4	Imani “Fleetfoot” Brooks	28 / 45 (62.2%)	Theo “Knot” Mercer	17 / 45
Seat 5	Caleb “Sonar” Wright	23 / 45 (51.1%)	Rhea “Crosswind” Patel	22 / 45
Seat 6	Jun “Overwatch” Park	27 / 45 (60.0%)	Maeve “Wakefield” Quinn	18 / 45

ILLUSTRATION 05 — The first House meeting: the Speaker organizes proceedings but cannot dictate members' votes.

Speaker of the House · member vote

Nominees: Lucas “Soundings” Chen and Elena “Sparrow” Cruz, both elected Representatives.
Result: Lucas wins the internal Speaker vote 4–2 among the six Representatives. This is separate from the clanwide House election and reflects the source rule that Speaker is elected by House members.
Acceptance: Lucas asks Elena to co-chair a calendar-reform working group, while making clear that the Speaker recognizes speakers, manages the agenda, and organizes votes—not the way Representatives vote.

15 • THE 23–22 DISPUTE

FICTION

A fair process must be credible when the margin is only one vote.

ILLUSTRATION 06 — Review table: an appeal tests the count and rules, not the dignity of a candidate.

The petition

Rhea “Crosswind” Patel files a private challenge to House Seat 5 within the proposed 24-hour window. She does not claim to know another member’s vote; she asks whether the posted tally correctly distinguishes submitted ballots from an attempted duplicate. In campaign chat, a screenshot rumor has made members doubt the result.

Clerk review

Three non-candidate election clerks compare the anonymous ballot-token ledger, the sealed tally sheet, and the published totals. One duplicate attempt was blocked before ballot submission and is not included in the 45 valid votes. No identity-to-vote mapping is available to the campaign. The certified count remains 23–22.

Court ruling after judicial appointments

FICTION

Once the judiciary is confirmed, Rhea asks for an independent review. Chief Justice Selene Ward and the Associate Justices examine the rules and the clerks’ certification, then issue a narrow ruling: the challenge was timely; the clerks followed the approved procedure; there is no evidence of a miscount or coercion; the election result stands. The opinion recommends a pre-ballot “how to vote” post and a public post-election audit summary. It does not punish the losing candidate for asking questions.

16 • APPOINTMENTS & CONFIRMATIONS

The source requires CINC nominations and Senate confirmation for department heads; judicial selection also requires Senate confirmation.

Department heads nominated by CINC · Senate confirms

The new CINC submits six nominees with short written mandates. Confirmation vote results below are fictional and show the Senate doing diligence rather than rubber-stamping friends. A failed nominee would remain unappointed until a new nomination is considered.

Department	Nominee	Mandate	Senate vote
Personnel Chief	Marisol Vega	Roster records, onboarding, rank/tier reviews	4–0 confirmed
Treasury Chief	Gabriel Cho	In-game resource/event ledger; no hidden reward promises	3–1 confirmed
Diplomacy Chief	Idris Bell	Alliances, scrim diplomacy, dispute-free partner contacts	4–0 confirmed
Communications Chief	Sloane Hart	Official notices, election archive, public summaries	4–0 confirmed
Operations Chief	Ethan Vale	Calendar, workflows, event readiness, cross-branch tracking	3–1 confirmed
Chief of Staff	Naomi Pike	Action register, executive schedule, handover continuity	4–0 confirmed

Chief Justice · Selene Ward

CINC nominee; Senate confirms 4–0. Former mediator and replay reviewer, known for separating evidence from frustration.

Associate Justices · Aria Bell & Jonah Rook

Aria confirmed 3–1; Jonah confirmed 4–0. Their fictional appointment terms are staggered under the source rule; exact inaugural expiry dates are a proposed transition schedule.

17 · FLEET COMMAND IS APPOINTED, NOT ELECTED

SOURCE

Seven competitive posts; selection is based on skill, experience, and performance.

ILLUSTRATION 07 — Battle line under pressure: competitive leadership is judged by preparation and decisions, not by popularity.

Rank / post	Appointee	Why this fit is credible
Fleet Admiral	Victor “Spear” Moreno	Strategy lead; clear post-battle reviews and calm calling under pressure.
Vice Admiral	Lena “Volt” Nguyen	Deputy leader; division structure, substitution and roster coordination.
Rear Admiral	Marcus “Sonar” Hale	Training and tactical research; builds learning blocks from replay evidence.
Commodore	Jae “Gunner” Kim	Division management; tracks practice groups and role coverage.
Captain · Main	Talia “Tideglass” Byrne	Main-team leader; stable communication and disciplined execution.
Captain · Development	Omar “Crosshair” Haddad	Development roster; creates safe reps for newer callers and gunners.
Commander	Finn “Bearing” Walsh	Scrims and tactical coordination; owns opponent notes and practice setup.

Selection method · proposed inaugural transition

PROPOSED

Because the source defines merit-based appointment but not the first selector, the founding competitive steering group applies a published scorecard: game knowledge, calling, attendance, communication, review quality, and willingness to coach. Results are written down; the role is not a popularity contest. The appointed match commander retains authority during live play.

18 • SERVICE CORPS & THE MEMBER TIERS

Executive-appointed community services keep the server, roster, and events functional.

Service post	Appointee	First 60-day outcome
Community Safety Chief	Noura Salem	Publish safe-reporting path; review risk trends and escalation times.
Moderation Officer	Petra “Beacon” MacIver	Keep a private incident log; train moderators on consistent responses.
Recruitment Officer	Kira “Sparrow” Dalca	Welcome flow, trial checklist, and new-member follow-up.
Events Officer	Rafael “Quarterdeck” Ortiz	Publish monthly event calendar and track host/substitute coverage.
Training Officer	Avery Cole	Foundations course, caller practice and replay review schedule.
Analytics Officer	Victor Cho	Maintain attendance and match summaries with context notes.
Technical Officer	Inez Park	Role permissions, backup checks, bot configuration and recovery notes.
Logistics Officer	Quinn Baxter	Scrim coordination, room assignments, opponent contact and event readiness.

General membership · 14 seats

FICTION

Senior Petty Officers (4): Elias Mercer, Jonah Bell, Darius Holt, Tessa Park.
Petty Officers (4): Amara Okafor, Owen Flynn, Briar Wallace, Rhea Patel.
Shipmates (4): Mark Jansen, Dana Price, Theo Mercer, Maeve Quinn.
Ensigns/Cadets (2): Arlo Finch, Beth DuPont.

Why losers remain in the story

All 12 unsuccessful electoral candidates stay in the clan and are assigned to the 14 general-membership seats in this fictional roster. The two cadets are additional non-candidate members. Losing a vote does not imply loss of membership, voice, or eligibility to contribute.

19 · DISCORD IS THE DIGITAL QUARTERDECK

The clan's server is part command room, part social space, and part record of decisions.

ILLUSTRATION 08 — The digital quarterdeck: Discord channels provide separate places for official notices, tactics, training, and community.

#training	Guides, replay notes, caller practice	Open to all members; feedba
#recruitment	Welcome process and trial tasks	Recruitment team maintains
#events	Social nights, tournaments, attendance polls	Calendar is owned by Events
#support / reports	Private safety, moderation, and technical tickets	Restricted visibility; share or

Discord code of conduct · proposed policy

PROPOSED

1. Respect members and staff; critique decisions without harassment or discrimination.
2. Keep channels on topic and use designated report channels for sensitive issues.
3. Never share passwords, account tokens, private personal information, or private moderation records publicly.
4. Use role-based access; remove stale permissions during roster changes; enable two-factor authentication for staff accounts where available.
5. Moderator actions are logged privately; members can appeal sanctions to the independent judiciary once it is seated.
6. Immediate safety or security actions may be taken to contain harm, but the reason and review path must be recorded. These details are proposals, not in the supplied source.

20 • SHORT-TERM READINESS: FIRST 90 DAYS

A competitive clan needs reliable people, clear practice expectations, and safe systems before it needs a grand strategy.

Days 1–14 · Stabilize

- ☐ Publish final results and appointments.
- ☐ Confirm server roles and permission owners.
- ☐ Audit access for former staff and bots.
- ☐ Publish the practice calendar and event point of contact.
- ☐ Define core, development, reserve, and guest roster labels.
- ☐ Create a private dispute/report intake path.

Days 15–45 · Build routines

- ☐ Run two planned competitive practice blocks per week, adjusted to member availability.
- ☐ Hold one training/replay review session weekly.
- ☐ Introduce a substitute and attendance board.
- ☐ Keep a short after-action review: plan, decision, result, next change.
- ☐ Assign a mentor to every new Shipmate/Cadet.
- ☐ Keep public metrics contextual and non-shaming.

Days 46–90 · Validate

- ☐ Run a roster trial cycle with published criteria.
- ☐ Review the first member pulse check.
- ☐ Test Discord backup and staff handover procedures.
- ☐ Evaluate scrim communication and tactical role coverage.
- ☐ Present a first-quarter report to Senate and House.
- ☐ Adjust workload when volunteers are overloaded.

Short-term competitive team requirements

PROPOSED

People: known roles, primary and substitute coverage, caller rotation, a clear trial path, respectful feedback.
Practice: scheduled scrims, repeatable objectives, map/mode study appropriate to the current game season, replays, and action items that persist across sessions.
Operations: attendance polls, opponent coordination, a reliable event host, a secure place for tactical notes, and an after-action record.
Community: accessible beginner sessions, scheduled social events, safe reporting, consistent moderation, and transparent decisions.
Evidence: define success before the activity—attendance, communication, execution, learning, or results—rather than changing the scorecard after a loss. These are proposed operational requirements for the scenario; the source chart does not prescribe them.

21 · THE FIRST COMPETITIVE SEASON

FICTION

A fictional ten-week campaign plan: learn the roster, establish doctrine, then compete.

ILLUSTRATION 09 — First season at sea: the measure of success is both competitive progress and how the team learns.

Window	Primary aim	Evidence to review
Weeks 1–2 · Pre-season	Confirm roster roles and communication protocol	Availability, roles, callouts, and practice attendance
Weeks 3–4 · Baseline	Establish a repeatable practice pattern	Replay review actions completed; repeated execution e
Weeks 5–6 · Mid-cycle	Test adaptations and reserve readiness	Substitute handovers; tactical adjustment quality
Weeks 7–8 · Competitive push	Play scheduled scrims and clan battles	Win/loss, but also openings, focus fire, survivability and
Weeks 9–10 · Review	Publish season report and next-cycle plan	What worked, what failed, who is ready for a new respo

Mock season outcome (fictional; illustrative only)

Regular season: 18–6 across scheduled practice matches; the team improves from inconsistent mid-fight focus to a stable target-call routine. Playoffs: quarterfinal win 3–1, semifinal win 3–2, final loss 2–3. The Admiralty finishes runner-up in its fictional bracket.

Season review: Fleet Admiral Victor Moreno credits the development roster for making substitute rotations less disruptive. Rowan Pierce calls the result a proof of process, not proof that the clan is finished. Elias Mercer asks for the final loss to be replay-reviewed before any roster changes. Both requests are adopted.

22 • FIRST LAW: SCRIM READINESS & ROSTER FAIRNESS ACT

A mock example of Congress making rules, the executive carrying them out, and the court protecting due process.

House bill · passed 5–1

PROPOSED

Purpose: prevent roster surprises while keeping tactical decisions in the hands of match commanders.
Key provisions (proposed):
- Core and development roster criteria are published before trials.
- Availability polls close before roster-lock time.
- A high-stakes bench decision gets a private explanation and a next-step path after the match.
- No one is promised a permanent slot; live match commanders keep authority.
- A quarterly report checks whether the process is consistent.

Senate review · passed 3–1

Senators add a privacy safeguard: public reports show trends and decisions, not private health, employment, family, or moderation details. The Senate asks the Operations Chief to report roster-process compliance after 60 days. Felix Shaw wants a clear review date; Priya Nair wants a right to appeal procedural mistakes.

CINC action · signed

Rowan Pierce signs the bill and directs the Chief of Staff to publish an implementation checklist. In his note, he states that the law governs process, not ship picks or live tactics. He rejects a proposed public “bench list” because it would turn a coaching tool into humiliation. The law becomes the first test of whether a campaign promise can be converted into a workable team rule.

Checks, balance, and the veto path

SOURCE

The source rule is explicit: both chambers must approve a law before it reaches CINC for signature or veto; a veto override requires two-thirds of each chamber. The Court does not draft tactics or set the roster—it reviews constitutional fairness, sanctions, and appeals. The example bill passes both chambers, so no veto or override is needed. Future amendments must follow the same bicameral path.

23 • THE ROAD AHEAD

The first election is not the finish line; it is the first test of a durable culture.

0–3 months · Stability

- Seat all elected offices and confirm appointments.
- Document Discord access and incident response.
- Complete a 60-day training and roster review.
- Publish the first public branch update.
- Keep the inaugural House schedule visible.

3–12 months · Capability

- Use season review to improve practice quality.
- Grow a development roster and caller pipeline.
- Run regular tournaments and community events.
- Review appointment performance and volunteer load.
- Hold House elections quarterly and annual executive/Senate elections on schedule.

1–3 years · Resilience

- Build a leadership pipeline so roles do not depend on one founder.
- Maintain mentorship and written tactical knowledge.
- Improve competitive results without abandoning member safety.
- Build healthy allied-clan relationships.
- Revisit rules through constitutional procedure, not emergency chat polls.

ILLUSTRATION 10 — A fleet at dusk: a visual metaphor for continuity beyond one election cycle.

Final narrative: “Different views, one mission”

On the first night after certification, Rowan and Elias enter the same training room. Elias still believes the clan needs harder standards; Rowan still believes standards must come with explanation and a path back. Mira asks Jonah to show the new calendar, Ava publishes the first Senate agenda, and Lucas opens the House question queue. Rhea’s appeal is closed without retaliation, and the court’s procedural recommendation becomes the first small improvement to the next election.

The Admiralty’s promise: competitive ambition, community safety, and fair governance are not competing slogans. They are three duties the team must balance in practice. The clan will be judged not only by the battles it wins, but by whether people understand the rules, trust the process, and want to sail together again.

APPENDIX A · PERSONNEL FILES & INDEPENDENT JUSTICE

FICTION

Short dossiers add the human context behind appointments; all characters and records are fictional.

Personnel Chief · Marisol Vega

Marisol was the first founding mentor to turn onboarding from a welcome message into a sequence of practical milestones. She pairs new players with experienced Shipmates and keeps promotion feedback specific: what skill is demonstrated, what still needs practice, and who can help. Mira trusts her because she never promises a rank she cannot deliver.

Treasury Chief · Gabriel Cho

Gabriel maintains the in-game resource and event ledger. He once caught a duplicated reward tally, corrected the record privately, and published a clean change note rather than naming the volunteer who made the error. Ava wants his ledger auditable; Gabriel insists it must also explain assumptions and exceptions.

Diplomacy Chief · Idris Bell

Idris knows how to speak to rival clans after a heated match without turning the result into an insult. He helped reopen scrim talks with North Meridian after the Harbor Night argument. He discloses that Vice Commander candidate Jonah Bell is a relative and accepts recusal from any matter involving Jonah personally.

Communications Chief · Sloane Hart

Sloane was the person who stopped an inaccurate roster rumor from becoming an official claim. Her rule is simple: publish decisions with dates, owners, and reasons; keep private moderation details private. She builds a searchable public archive so members do not have to rely on screenshots or hearsay.

Operations Chief · Ethan Vale

Ethan has organized divisions across incompatible work and school schedules. He replaces parallel calendars with one source of truth and insists every event notice names a host, time, voice channel, and backup. His platform is operational clarity, not a new layer of command over Fleet Command.

Chief of Staff · Naomi Pike

Naomi is a meticulous note-taker who turns meetings into an action register: decision, owner, due date, and review point. During the first transition she makes sure unfinished tasks do not vanish when founders hand over access. She is the executive branch's memory, not a shadow decision-maker.

Chief Justice · Selene Ward

Selene has served as a neutral mediator and replay reviewer. She asks what evidence supports a claim, whether both sides had a fair chance to respond, and whether the sanction fits the conduct. She refuses to advise the CINC on tactical choices because that would compromise the court's independence.

Associate Justice · Aria Bell

Aria is an analyst who is careful about the difference between an error and misconduct. She checks the written rule before judging whether a person violated it. Her judicial role is deliberately separate from her past tactical-analysis work; she cannot direct Fleet Command or rewrite the evidence standard after the fact.

Associate Justice · Jonah Rook

Jonah Rook has mediated community disputes and argues for an appeal path that members can understand without needing a lawyerly vocabulary. He favors written reasons, proportionate outcomes, and restoration where possible. His appointment terms are staggered under the source rule; exact inaugural dates remain a proposed transition schedule.

APPENDIX B · FLEET COMMAND DOSSIERS

FICTION

Seven appointments, one competitive purpose: build a reliable system that makes individual skill work together.

Fleet Admiral · Victor “Spear” Moreno

Victor declined to endorse either CINC candidate and submitted a written competitive record instead. He has led divisions through both strong streaks and ugly defeats. His first doctrine note focuses on preparation, communication, and post-battle learning—not a promise of easy wins.

Vice Admiral · Lena “Volt” Nguyen

Lena is the deputy who notices the missing substitute before the roster is locked. She builds role coverage, back-up callers, and cross-division practice. Mira mentored her early; Lena’s appointment rests on her performance record, not that friendship.

Rear Admiral · Marcus “Sonar” Hale

Marcus turns replay review into short training blocks. Rather than naming a player as the problem, he identifies the repeated decision point and asks the team to practice a better response. His work gives newer players a way to improve without being publicly ranked.

Commodore · Jae “Gunner” Kim

Jae coordinates division groups, player availability, and practice coverage. He once kept a scrim alive by rebuilding teams after two last-minute absences. His standard is a plan B that is known before the evening begins.

Main Captain · Talia “Tideglass” Byrne

Talia leads the primary competitive roster and believes a “core” label must mean current role fit, communication, and practice—not permanent status. She publishes the selection criteria before trials and gives players a path to earn a new look after they are benched.

Development Captain · Omar “Crosshair” Haddad

Omar volunteers for the difficult task of teaching while competing. He rotates junior callers through controlled practice, pairs experienced players with learners, and tracks whether coaching changed a behavior. He argues that the development roster is a pipeline, not a waiting room.

Commander · Finn “Bearing” Walsh

Finn owns scrim coordination, opponent notes, practice setup, and the debrief log. He can test an unfamiliar approach in practice but keeps live match authority with the designated match commander. His goal is repeatable execution under pressure, not a single signature tactic.

APPENDIX C · SERVICE CORPS DOSSIERS

FICTION

Eight appointed roles keep the Discord, membership pipeline, training, and events usable at a 50-member scale.

Community Safety Chief · Noura Salem

Noura receives sensitive reports and routes them to the right reviewer. She does not promise secrecy beyond the people who need to investigate, and she documents when a safety concern needs urgent containment.

Moderation Officer · Petra “Beacon” MacIver

Petra keeps a private incident log and trains moderators to apply the same rules to veterans and newcomers. She helped the election clerks preserve records, then recused herself from the court’s decision on Rhea’s appeal.

Recruitment Officer · Kira “Sparrow” Dalca

Kira welcomes trial players with one short checklist, a named contact, and an honest preview of activity expectations. She wants recruiting to find people who fit the culture, not collect impressive profiles that never attend.

Events Officer · Rafael “Quarterdeck” Ortiz

Rafael runs the event calendar and keeps the social side alive during competitive weeks. Every event has a host and a backup; cancellations are posted early rather than left for members to discover in voice.

Training Officer · Avery Cole

Avery works with Marcus Hale to turn recurring mistakes into 20-minute drills. New players can practice positioning, target calling, and communication without the pressure of a high-stakes match.

Analytics Officer · Victor Cho

Victor maintains match summaries and availability data with contextual notes. He is careful to separate a statistic from a judgment about a person. He supports aggregate reporting, not public shaming leaderboards.

Technical Officer · Inez Park

Inez maintains Discord role permissions, bot settings, backups, and recovery notes. Her quarterly access check removes stale roles and confirms that the server can still be administered if one trusted account becomes unavailable.

Logistics Officer · Quinn Baxter

Quinn coordinates scrim times, room assignments, opponent contact, and event readiness. He tracks time-zone constraints and keeps one confirmed schedule so the fleet is not relying on conflicting direct messages.
